

Sally Simonfay

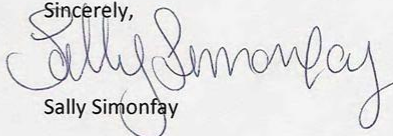

January 14, 2008

Dear Friend,

Each day when my son and I walk into Little Angel's Schoolhouse, he immediately begins to laugh and smile. Steven literally jumps out of my arms and into Rima or Caludia's. He has never shed a tear when I leave! I believe the reason why Steven adores Little Angel's is because he knows he is loved and cared for. Each morning when he enters Rima's home, he knows that he is going to have a great day! Consequently, when I pick him up, he is usually more interested in playing with his friends and having a good time than he is in greeting me. As a parent, this is exactly what my husband and I hoped for when we would leave our 'most precious angel' in someone else's care.

Little Angel's Schoolhouse was recommended to me by two friends who already had their children in Rima's care. When I visited for the first time, I just loved how my son and I were walking into someone's home and not an institutional day care setting. The rooms were bright and cheerful. There were lots of toys and books. Children's artwork and pictures decorated the walls. It was wonderful to think that he could learn, have fun, and be taken care of in such an ideal setting. I should add that there were certain things that were absent from this place...it didn't smell like messy kids and dirty diapers, it was kept immaculately clean, and I felt like there wasn't a germ in the whole house. Interestingly, since my son has been in Rima's care, he has never been sick (I don't think those big day care centers could say that!) Rima is always available to speak with me, offer advice, or give a few words of encouragement when I haven't had a decent nights sleep in weeks.

After having Steven at home for eight months, my decision to return to work rested solely on finding the best care for him. I really struggled to find the perfect setting where he could be nurtured and encouraged to learn and develop. Fortunately, we found a perfect match! I have peace of mind each day at work knowing that Steven is in a safe environment receiving personal attention. It is with the greatest confidence that I recommend Little Angel's Schoolhouse.

Sincerely,

Sally Simonfay